Introduction

Since the middle of the eighteenth century the Moravian Brethren have been engaged in missionary activity among the Eskimoes of northern Labrador. In 1771 the first Mission station was founded at Main, which remained the headquarters for the Labrador Mission until after World War II. The main impulse for the missionary venture came from the Brethren in Germany and in England. The former provided the bulk of the personnel; the latter, through their missionary agency, the Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel, were chiefly responsible for the financing and supply of the Mission. It was also the Brethren in England, of course, who secured from the British Crown the necessary land grants for the Mission settlements. Following the settlement at Main, other Mission stations were founded at Okak in 1776 and at Hopedale in 1782, to the north and south of Main respectively. In the course of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries further Mission posts were established on the Coast of Labrador, extending from Makkovik in the south, near Hamilton Inlet, to Killinek, close to Cape Chidley in the north. At the present day the Moravians still maintain four Mission stations - Main, Hopedale and Makkovik on the Coast, and an interior Mission at Happy Valley, near Goose Bay, where the Superintendent of the Labrador Province is now stationed.

As the various Mission settlements became established on the Coast, the methodical German missionaries set up station Archives where were deposited incoming letters, copies of outgoing ones, and other written records. The bulk of these records have been preserved intact down through the years, in spite of inevitable losses consequent upon fires and the abandonment of stations. In the summer of 1959, at the invitation of the Moravian Church authorities, the Memorial University of Newfoundland sponsored a visit to the Moravian Mission stations by the Professor of German and the Archivist-Historian at the University. They secured several cartons of historical material. After these records were sorted and arranged at the University in St. John's, the Public Archives of Canada microfilmed them in Ottawa. The ultimate destination of the original records is the Moravian Archives in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. The Church Books of the various Mission stations, however, have been returned to Labrador.

The records of the Moravian mission in Labrador essentially cover the period from 1770 to the twentieth century. They are comprised in large part of the incoming and outgoing correspondence of the various Mission stations, both correspondence to and from Europe, and intra-Labrador correspondence. In addition, there exist for some stations valuable "diaries" or annual reports, which chronicle life at the Mission throughout the year. Other items of special importance are the Church Books and the yearly accounts of goods ordered from Europe and goods shipped to Europe. The Moravian Church operated trading stores in conjunction with its Mission work until 1926. Most of the Moravian records relate to the Mission stations of Nain, Hopedale, and Hebron. The documents are generally in German, although some of the earliest and latest records are in English. The records are arranged according to Mission stations and then according to type of document. The correspondence of each station has been organized into series in terms of its origin and destination. Within the series, letters are filed chronologically.

The records of the Moravian Mission in Labrador constitute a prime source of information on the life of the Labrador Coast and will be indispensable to those studying the economic and social history of the region.

L. WEEKLY NEWS

This handwritten weekly periodical was issued by the Conference of Moravian Elders, generally from Berthelsdorf, and occasionally from Herrnhut or Gnadenfrey. When the Moravian Synod was in session, this periodical was issued from there. It contains reports from Moravian Mission stations around the world, e.g. in Greenland, South Africa, the East Indies and Labrador. Particularly valuable are the excerpts from the diaries kept at the mission posts in Labrador. Filed with the Weekly News are also memorabilia for various years, representing the minutes of special conferences, and occasional letters from the Moravian Synod to the brothers and sisters of the Mission. The Weekly News, 1782-1859, are arranged in bundles for the following years:

Note: there are other materials mixed with these. Ordinarily extraneous materials are from the Gemein-Nachrichten.
